Professor Fiss teaches procedure, legal theory, and constitutional law and is the author of many articles and books on these subjects, including more recently, Troubled Beginnings of the Modern State, Liberalism Divided, The Irony of Free Speech, A Community of Equals, A Way Out/America's Ghettos and the Legacy of Racism, Adjudication and its Alternatives (with Judith Resnik), and The Law as it Could Be.

The Cegla Center for Interdisciplinary Research of the Law

The Cegla Center for Interdisciplinary Research of the Law, named in honor of Dr. Wolf Cegla, seeks to explore the potential for a holistic look at law. Its various activities, and in particular its journal Theoretical Inquiries in Law, are devoted to the application of insights into law developed in diverse disciplines, such as moral and political theory, epistemology, social science, economics and game theory, probability theory, and cognitive psychology. We strive to promote a multi-disciplinary research of the complex interrelationships between law, society, and individuals, and provide a forum for discussion among all those who have an interest in looking at law from more than a single theoretical perspective. In addition we aim at providing a venue for scholars from different parts of the globe, particularly those at the start of their professional careers, to interact and learn from each other, as part of our interest in cross-cultural learning.

In addition to the publication of Theoretical Inquiries in Law, the Center organizes international conferences and symposia, brings visiting professors from abroad to teach at the law school, supports law faculty seminars and workshops, awards grants to researchers beginning their academic careers, supports research undertaken by faculty members, and sends student and faculty delegations to universities and research institutes abroad.
